2. Translated title of the qualification

Commercial Employee, Diploma of Vocational Education and Training

Profile B (basic)

Specialism Banking

3. Profile of skills and competences

Holders of this qualification are able to do the following:

- a. Perform service-oriented tasks in business processes.
- b. Carry out many different types of tasks, from advising external and internal customers on administrative work to handling activities relating to a specific branch.
- c. Drawing from a unified set of competences, they carry out different activities depending on the given branch, company strategy and personal aptitudes.
- d. Adopt a customer-based orientation, take personal initiative and show a willingness to pursue lifelong learning.

There are two profiles for this VET programme, each requiring different levels of scholastic aptitude (Profile B = basic; Profile E = expanded). Learners who complete their training under Profile B are able to speak a second national language of Switzerland or English at level B1 within the European Language Portfolio (ELP) and possess extensive knowledge in the area of information, communication and administration. They interact directly with customers and carry out assignments independently. They provide verbal and written information to fellow employees and customers. Among other things, they use software applications to efficiently draft documents with an appealing layout.

This VET programme is available in 21 different specialisms, each representing a given branch of economic activity. The companies within each branch are responsible for apprenticeship training and corresponding qualification procedures.

4. Range of occupations accessible to the holder of the qualification

Holders of this qualification have a generalist profile in banking, with a focus on advising clients. They can be assigned to work independently or as part of a team. In the banking industry as well as in the entire field of commerce, a wide range of growth opportunities are open to them. The many different fields of activity depend on the size and type of the company. Generally speaking, this includes basic banking services such as opening accounts, processing payment transactions, issuing debit and credit cards and providing assistance with e-banking. Client advisory services may include such things as analysis of asset allocation, investment advice, pension planning as well as mortgage and lending for both private and corporate clients. Holders of this qualification also handle client instructions and transactions. This occupation is subject to applicable legislation, regulations and guidelines. For all banking activities, holders of this qualification possess a high level of technical competence as well as methodological, social and personal competences. This includes, for example, service-orientation, communication and advisory competence, integrated thinking and acting as well as the flexibility and the ability to use digital media.

6. Officially recognised ways of acquiring the qualification

Training for the Diploma of Vocational Education and Training: Commercial Employee lasts 3 years. Training content is usually distributed across two different learning locations: classroom instruction at a vocational school and apprenticeship training at a host company. However, depending on the VET programme, learners will also attend branch courses at a branch training centre. Host companies provide learners with practical skills associated with the occupation. Learners usually work an average of 3 day(s) per week.

- Vocational schools provide classroom instruction in vocational subjects and subjects falling under the category of language, communication and society (LCS). Learners usually attend classes an average of 2 day(s) per week; total number of lessons: 1800. - Branch courses are intended to provide learners with fundamental skills that are not covered by apprenticeship training at host companies nor in classroom instruction at vocational schools. The duration and content of branch courses is decided according to the needs of each branch

School-based VET programmes are possible, where learners spend more of their time at the vocational school and complete a traineeship at a host company lasting at least one year.

The qualification procedure and final examination includes the following:

- Written and oral testing of occupational practices
- Written and oral testing of the candidate's mother tongue
- Written and oral testing of foreign language skills
- Written testing of vocational subject: Information, Communication and Administration (ICA)
- Written testing of vocational subject: Business and Society (B&S)

Calculation of the overall scores for both the apprenticeship training and classroom instruction portion of the qualification procedure includes final test results as well as the grades obtained at all three learning locations (vocational school, host company and branch training centre) for the entire duration of the VET programme .

Other equivalent qualification procedures are possible.
