6. Officially recognised ways of acquiring the qualification

Training for the Diploma of Vocational Education and Training: Commercial Employee lasts 3 years. Training content is usually distributed across two different learning locations: classroom instruction at a vocational school and apprenticeship training at a host company. However, depending on the VET programme, learners will also attend branch courses at a branch training centre. - Host companies provide learners with practical skills associated with the occupation. Learners usually work an average of 3 day(s) per week.

- Vocational schools provide classroom instruction in vocational subjects and subjects falling under the category of language, communication and society (LCS). Learners usually attend classes an average of 2 day(s) per week; total number of lessons: 1800. - Branch courses are intended to provide learners with fundamental skills that are not covered by apprenticeship training at host companies nor in classroom instruction at vocational schools. The duration and content of branch courses is decided according to the needs of each branch

School-based VET programmes are possible, where learners spend more of their time at the vocational school and complete a traineeship at a host company lasting at least one year.

The qualification procedure and final examination includes the following:

- Written and oral testing of occupational practices
- Written and oral testing of the candidate's mother tongue
- Written and oral testing of foreign language skills
- Written testing of vocational subject: Information, Communication and Administration (ICA)
- Written testing of vocational subject: Business and Society (B&S)

Calculation of the overall scores for both the apprenticeship training and classroom instruction portion of the qualification procedure includes final test results as well as the grades obtained at all three learning locations (vocational school, host company and branch training centre) for the entire duration of the VET programme .

Other equivalent qualification procedures are possible
